

Jean Rogers, M.S.Ed. is Director of the Screen Time Action Network at Fairplay, a global collaborative of practitioners, educators, advocates and parents working to reduce excessive and harmful screen use in childhood and keep kids safe online. She is an expert in designing national and international programs, movement-building, and establishing key partnerships that support child wellbeing in a digital world. Her NextGen Connect program is an intergenerational incubator which empowers young people—the generation experiencing the harms of digital socialization-- to create solutions for their peers and generations to come. She is the author of Kids Under Fire: Seven Simple Steps to Combat the Media Attack on Your Child, a parenting guide which helps parents empower children to make healthy media choices. Jean is a Certified Parent Educator, specializing in how screen media impacts family life and child development and a Certified Digital Wellness Educator who was named one of 12 thought leaders in the field in the Digital Wellness Collaborative Report 2020.
